Shrinking South America Soybean Production Constricts Trade and Boosts Prices

 For all 2021/22 forecasts in the chart, the parentheses indicate the month and year of the WASDE publication that coincide with the corresponding soybean production forecasts*

Dry weather in South America over the past 2 months has significantly depressed forecast soybean yields and slashed production. In the first USDA forecast released in May 2021, the combined total 2021/22 soybean crop in Brazil, Argentina, and Paraguay was a record but is now forecast to be the smallest crop since 2018/19. Since the December 2021 WASDE, soybean production in these three countries has been lowered by more than 18 million tons: down 7 percent in Brazil, down 9 percent in Argentina, and down 37 percent in Paraguay.

If realized, this massive decrease in the South American soybean crop is likely to significantly constrict global trade. In total, South America soybean exports are cut nearly 6 million tons this month and crush is down over 2 million tons. In Brazil, smaller production is expected to impact the export market more than domestic crush. In Paraguay, both exports and crush are forecast down around 1 million tons. Argentina supplies are squeezed from both lower production and smaller imports from Paraguay, resulting in both lower exports and crush. Likewise, 2021/22 global soybean imports are no longer expected to be a record and global soybean meal consumption growth is forecast below 2 percent for the first time this forecasting cycle. With tighter supplies supporting higher prices, consumers are likely to import fewer soybeans and offset smaller supplies by drawing down stocks, decreasing soybean meal consumption, or substituting with other protein meals.

Daily FOB Soybean Export Prices

Source: International Grains Council

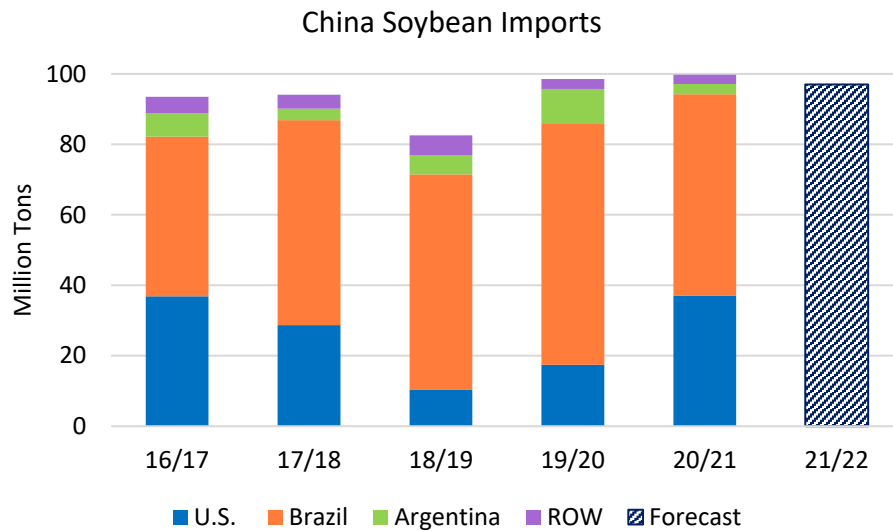

Along with waning soybean and meal trade, soybean prices have jumped in response to the smaller South American crop and forecast tight stocks. As of February 7, soybean export prices have shot up to near-decade highs at $640/ton FOB Argentina (Up River) and $627/ton FOB Brazil (Paranagua). Since the release of the December 2021 WASDE, soybean export prices have jumped 17 percent in Argentina and 22 percent in Brazil. A large portion of these price gains are due to expected tight soybean stocks in Argentina and Brazil at the end of September 2022, which are forecast to be an 8-year-low at a combined 45 million tons.

The changing soybean market dynamics in South America may have bullish implications on exports of the upcoming U.S. soybean crop. In response to climbing soybean prices in South America, U.S. soybean export prices are up 25 percent since the December WASDE. Additionally, tight South America stocks at the start of the U.S. harvest and peak soybean export season in October 2022 have the potential to boost U.S. exports. For instance, September 2022 ending stocks in Brazil are forecast to be only 2 million tons larger than they were 2 years prior, which coincided with a record export pace of U.S. soybeans during the beginning of the 2020/21 marketing year. Assuming import demand in China and other key markets remains little changed this year, 2022/23 U.S. soybean exports seem poised to benefit from both tight South American exportable supplies and high prices.

MARKET FEATURE

China Soybean Imports Contract

China soybean imports in marketing year 2021/22 are forecast 3.0 million tons lower this month at 97.0 million tons. From October to December, imports are down 13 percent from the previous year. The pace of soybean processing has slowed since October 2021 as margins are squeezed and crushers have been hampered by high input costs and low feed demand. Similarly, soybean processors in China are projected to reduce crush volumes by 3.0 million tons from the January forecast.

PROJECTION FOR 2021/22

Global oilseed production is down this month as adverse weather lowers soybean production in South America for the second month in a row, more than offsetting gains in India rapeseed production. Global trade is down on weaker demand from China and Egypt. Exports from Brazil, Paraguay, and Argentina are lowered. Global crush is down mostly on lower soybean crush in China, Argentina, and Paraguay more than offsetting higher India rapeseed and U.S. soybean crush. Global ending stocks are down on lower soybean carryout in Brazil, the United States, and Argentina.

Global protein meal production is down in line with crush as lower soybean meal production more than offsets higher rapeseed meal production. Global protein meal trade is down slightly on lower Argentina and Paraguay soybean meal exports partially offset by higher U.S. soybean meal exports. Protein meal stocks are mostly unchanged. Global vegetable oil production is down marginally as lower soybean oil production more than offsets slightly higher rapeseed oil. Vegetable oil trade is down on lower Indonesia palm oil shipments as high prices continue to hamper exports. Ending stocks are little changed overall as higher Indonesia palm oil carryout is largely offset by lower palm and soybean oil stocks in India and China. The projected U.S. season-average farm price for soybeans is up 40 cents to $13.00 per bushel.

EXPORT PRICES

January 2022 Soybean Export Prices

	U.S.	Argentina	Brazil
January Avg Price	$563/ton	$602/ton	$547/ton
Change vs December	+ $46/ton	+ $41/ton	+ $30/ton

Source: International Grains Council. All prices are FOB: U.S. Gulf, Argentina Up River, and Brazil Paranagua.

Soybean prices were up in January due to unfavorable weather in South America that is reducing harvest prospects. The U.S. Gulf soybean price gains exceeded those in South America. Much of the gains since the January WASDE occurred in the last week of January and have continued into early February. From January through February 4, U.S. prices have risen 9 percent, Brazil up 12 percent, and Argentina up 7 percent.

January 2022 Soybean Meal Export Prices

	U.S.	Argentina	Brazil
January Avg Price	$489/ton	$465/ton	$470/ton
Change vs December	+ $38/ton	+ $39/ton	+ $49/ton

Source: International Grains Council. All prices are FOB: U.S. Gulf, Argentina Up River, and Brazil Paranagua.

Prices for soybean meal were up in January reflecting higher soybean prices. Prices peaked in early January and dropped sharply towards the end of the month as soybean oil prices appreciated; however, prices rallied in early February on higher soybean prices.

January 2022 Soybean and Palm Oil Export Prices

	U.S. Soybean Oil	Argentina Soybean Oil	Brazil Soybean Oil	Indonesia Palm Oil	Malaysia Palm Oil
January Avg Price	$1,458/ton	$1,372/ton	$1,389/ton	$1,413/ton	$1,353/ton
Change vs December	+ $115/ton	+ $21/ton	+ $37/ton	+ $74/ton	+ $80/ton

Source: International Grains Council; all prices are FOB: U.S. Gulf, Argentina Up River, Brazil Paranagua

Soybean and palm oil prices reversed trend in January, more than erasing the losses observed in December. Tight global vegetable oil supplies coupled with rising soybean prices contributed to the higher prices.
